

Subject: : Warm Water & Salt Water Fly-Fishing

Topic: : carp

Re: carp

Author: : wgmiller

Date: : 2009/1/28 13:48:49

URL:

Perhaps it's just me, but my impression of carp ever since I can remember is that they are the lowest species on the totem pole. I always associated them as being inhabitants of poor quality waterways and not selective eaters at all.

I have since found out they can in fact inhabit clean waterways as well.

Perhaps my impression is based on the fact that always saw 'locals' fishing for carp in the Conestoga River.

I'm sure that they are quite a rod bender and put up a tremendous fight. It surprises me that they are selective fly eaters because I was always under the impression that anything from corn to donuts would work for catching them.