I'm not going to point out that you're being a bit of a douche about this, because I'm pretty sure you realize it.

I should have qualified the statement with "many". My mistake.

It still holds. Not everyone is there for the divine karma. Some just do it for their own fishing enjoyment. Are those rosy colored glasses polarized?

In this own thread, two of us have admitted to it. My reasoning for doing stream work is "less than altruistic". I do it for the fishing. Paul agrees. There's nothing wrong with it.

I had a correspondence with VFTU and they never got back to me with info. I'd be happy to explain myself.

"Hi. I'm jay. I'm here to make my fishing experience better."

Altruistic - showing unselfish concern for the welfare of others.

Doin' it to make your fishing better doesn't fit the bill. It's not an insult, you're just making it one.

Sal, what's so funny? Your statement implies that you agree with me. I suspect you just enjoy typing 'lmfao'.
