Dave, thanks for doing this and sharing it with the community. It sounds like a great project. I'm looking forward to seeing your results.

No offense to the OPs that discussed sampling other environments but in project management we call that scope creep which can kill a project. If you choose two more environments in the three difference creeks that means nine sets of data instead of three meaning more time to sample, analyze (and hopefully publish) data.

No matter when and where I fish, I always turn over rocks, logs, etc. to sample the aquatic life. I did this for my spin fishing brothers and nephews one time and they couldn't believe what they saw. I told them that's why I out fish them! LOL.

Anyway, it's times/things like this when I wished I still lived in PA. If we could use a standard format, I would extend the study and pick a different stream to share. After the findings, I would consider extending the study to different environments.
