I worry more about deer ticks.

Timber rattlesnakes often don't rattle so, just because you don't hear 'em doesn't mean you should not be on the lookout for 'em. I'm not sure about when to expect to see them outside of their dens but would imagine that by early April they will be out on rocks on sunny days near denning sites. While not the largest rattlesnakes in the US (that distinction belongs to the Eastern Diamondback), timber rattlesnakes can top out at about 50 inches.
