troutbuster,

1. Is the gun to kill the snake for ID after the bite? Typically you can pull a gun, aim, and shoot, you coulda just gotten out of the way to begin with.

1b. Bears and bobcat, you don't need a gun for either. Mountain lions. I fully believe there's an escaped pet or two around which may live for years. I don't totally disregard the possibility of a wild, breeding population, but i have my doubts.

1c. That said, it is your right to carry your gun, and I support it. I don't thing you need it, but if you like to, then thats all the explanation you need.

4. I always carry my cell phone and it rarely runs out of charge. However, north of 80, coverage is pretty spotty unless you're near a town.

Pcray,

You really mustn't spend much time in the mountains... The heart of the spring trout season is just when bears and their CUBS are coming out of their dens. You stumble down to the creek and wind up between a sow and her cubs and tell me a gun is worthless.

And if you're one of those guys who says "well I know a hundred fisherman who have never had this happen to them", thats the worst excuse in the books. And for people that do think like that, I hope it does happen to you.

Now enough of this retarded discussion about carrying....
