Your argument seems logical if one accepts your premise: "These streams in question are fragile and so are the trout that inhabit them!" I do not accept this as I think it is mostly untrue. I think while some of these waters are fragile, the majority if not the vast majority are not. I don't think the trout that inhabit them are fragile in any of them.

This said, I do like the idea of closing the streams to fishing during a part of the year, though I don't think it needs to be the entire extended season. If they are closed to fishing, I would suggest during the spawn, or, say, from September 1 through February 28/29, but only if they are closed to all types of fishing, including fly angling.
