Your argument seems logical if one accepts your premise: "These streams in question are fragile and so are the trout that inhabit them!" I do not accept this as I think it is mostly untrue. I think while some of these waters are fragile, the majority if not the vast majority are not. I don't think the trout that inhabit them are fragile in any of them.

This said, I do like the idea of closing the streams to fishing during a part of the year, though I don't think it needs to be the entire extended season.

If they are closed to fishing, I would suggest during the spawn, or, say, from September 1 through February 28/29, but only if they are closed to all types of fishing, including fly angling.

Well, we agree on the important part. You say you think that the first part of what I said is "untrue", which is fine, yet you don't say why you think it's untrue?
