There is nothing wrong with using a standard tapered leader for nymphing.

I use the same leader for dry fly fishing and nymph fishing.

Just tie on a nymph and have at it.

Throw it up and across and drift it down through good looking spots.

I don't use indicators. Even if you try indicators, I highly recommend spending at least half you time nymphing without an indicator.

Fishing without an indicator is something that flyfishers should learn. And I don't mean just short line nymph fishing, but also nymph fishing with a good bit of line out (20 or 30 feet or so).
