Well, I had the Smokies experiment in mind from the moment I posted on this thread because it is the only study I am aware of that dealt with the issue of whether harvest is a significant limiting factor in brook trout populations in mountain freestones.

It was easy to "find," though, because all I did was search for "Smoky Mountains Brook Trout Study" and those two links were right at the top.

Maybe someone can find a study demonstrating that eastern brook trout in mountain freestones are impacted by harvest-- but, I have great doubts.
