Your time is coming. Soon the Bluegills will start moving into the shallows and you can hone your newly found skills on them. You can go to the Point or pretty much any body of water and cast foam spiders, small nymphs or just about anything you think they can fit in their mouths.

A hand size bluegill fights as hard as a two pound trout. But more importantly you can catch enough of them at one time to consider it good practice.

If you've started tying your own flies they're also great because they take all your reject flies that you'd never present to a trout.

The only down side is that they usually turn on right between the time all the ATWs close and opening day. But they are an awesome way to learn to fly fish. Good luck.
