Thanks for all the advice guys. I guess I should clarify my fishing experience. I have been fishing with spin gear for as long as i can remember. I was introduced to fly fishing a few years ago in New Mexico, and it has been on my mind ever since. I have experienced fishing from hooking up baracuda in the Keys up to small sunfish ponds in PA and most everything in between. I have been looking forward to getting after some smallies on the fly rod for a while now, and I will definitely try to perfect my technique on the warm water fish. For now though I am hunting the elusive trout. I have spent a good portion of my time in the DHALO section of pine creek. I was more mondering about what works as far as flies and what I should look for as far as places (not specific holes, but generally what are some signs I should look for as a likely hiding spot for trout) to find fish. Thanks again for the advice, and I will have to look into tying in the off season.
