All good advice above. Small streams you will obviously need to approach in a much more stealthy manner. Bigger waters are sometimes easier because you can stand in a good riffle or run and really work it over thoroughly and at very tight proximity to the fish without spooking them. I'm not sure what kind of streams you most often fish but different waters definitely require different skill sets.

I don't use or carry all that many flies with me. I do tend to use many variations of the same flies and I catch a lot of fish. Pheasant tails, Walt's worm, streamers, green weenie, San Juan worms, etc. None of these are particularly glamorous flies but they certainly catch a lot of fish.

If you need some flies and a better selection PM me your address and I'll mail you some flies.
