As to how important the "fly" is. I have seen suckers setting on the nest with a semi-circle (down stream side) of Browns and Bows waiting for a lose egg. I have also watched as a Bow would come up and bump the belly of a sucker making an egg drop from it's belly like a gum ball. Fish aren't smart??

I don't use them because of the danger of a deep hook, but I tie them for others. The one people around here seem to prefer is a single egg. Tied with UNI thread Fl. Orange, with cream egg yarn, on a 26 or 28 hook.

Suckers also spawn in the fall.
