

Subject: : Hatch and Entomology Forum

Topic: : Plague of Locusts Coming

Re: Plague of Locusts Coming

Author: : Maurice

Date: : 2019/3/6 16:14:48

URL:

Quote:

troutbert wrote:

Quote:

RLeep2 wrote:

When I was a kid, I used to do the cruising carp thing during inchworm time on the creek I grew up on, the outlet of a small natural lake. I only ever landed 2 or 3 and destroyed 2 Western Auto brand (Revelation) fly rods.

Like hooking a school bus..

What kind of inchworm pattern did you use back in those days?

In more modern times (1990s) I've used sinking chartreuse cotton chenille inchworm patterns for carp in an area of stream that has very little current.

I'd let the inchworm sink right to the bottom and just lay there. They are so bright colored that you can see them on the bottom.

Then a carp would wander by and vacuum it up. I was surprised that this worked, but it did.

I bet he says deer hair....before the green weenie, we tied them in deer hair and they were actually called green inchworms.