Jack,

I don't understand completely. Are you saying someone who is willing to pay a lot doesn't really care about the price? And is more interested in having a high end rod regardless if a cheaper rod performs similar?

I forget what the phenomenon is called, but it's documented in some psychology texts, I'm sure. When buying a new car, you don't really haggle over $300, yet when buying a DVD, you'd haggle over $3. The higher price essentially devalues individual dollars in our minds.

I think Jack's example is a little extreme, but if I'm shelling out over $500 for a rod, I'm not going to balk at a better model that is over $600.
