Sal,

Not really what i was getting at...it was more or less a backhanded remark relating to the brimstone that my post on another water created...you know the post where everyone started saying that people dont use the internet to find where to go fish because there are giant lists of streams out there... Im not saying not to talk about the quarry, just using it as an example on how a name drop draws immediate attention... yea sure there are lists of waters out there for people to browse through, and anglers like you and myself use these to explore...however a TON of the lazys out there simply wait for names to drop on sites like this, then run and stomp around... for lots of places, its not big deal, merely another angler to the hoards that already fish certain water, however on other smaller streams, i feel like it kind of is a big deal to get even one extra angler a year.... Its all a matter of preference, however i am not suggesting not to talk about all water, just certain water...

that and i was posting becasue i saw a coot and like 6 snow geese, thought it was kind of odd...on that goofy little quarry water to see those birds...
