Ideal dry fly weather is whenever I find fish rising.

Just some of the thought processes I would go through...

If you feel they were spooking from your tippet, move to give a different presentation or try a downstream drift to them so the fly is the first thing they see.

I will also try a midge dry without hackle so it floats flush on the surface to give a different tippet / fly dynamic.

With my midging, I find micro drag is typically the culprit more than leader shyness.
