Like David said, try fishing the dry down to them so they see the dry first and not your leader. To achieve a good drift you can try a dump cast. On your forward stroke drop your rod tip to the water. Your leader and tippet will pile up and give you a drag free drift. Another thing to try is time when the fish comes up. Cast down to him a bunch of times but pull your fly out of the water two feet ahead of him. On cast eight or nine let him have it. This works pretty good a lot of the times. But not all the time.....
