

Subject: : Conservation

Topic: : Why?

Re: Why?

Author: : Wulff-Man

Date: : 2007/3/22 19:40:42

URL:

According to the PFBC they stopped stocking fingerlings in the Tully because there was a very poor survival rate. I have no reason to doubt that. Actually, I think it fishes much better now that they started stocking adults again. Some of them might grow into some very nice holdovers.

They have also stocked fingerlings in the Little Juniata and Penns Creek, and there was a lot of opposition, more because it was seen as polluting wild trout fisheries more than it being a nuisance, I think. And the fingerlings just ended up being brown trout food and didn't survive well.