If you can manage to be out and the sun is shining brightly, check out any pool after a riffle and look for fish to be moving around facing upstream. I have found some great spots here in central Pa that are fairly deep, and the trout are just stacked up in there like cord wood. I haven't learned how to fish faster water, and I'm in the same boat you are as far as knowing what and where, but if I can find a pool and see the fish, then it's all about throwing something at them that they will take. I had to take my Bass hat off and put my trout hat on. Bigger is usually better for bass, but I'm finding that smaller is generally the deal for trout.

That is probably not even CLOSE to being true, but I have been catching 12 & 14" rainbows on a little black fly I had, that I can BARELY even get the line through the eye of the hook.

It aint gotta be pretty. And I STILL can't believe that these trout, in fast OR slow water, can even SEE these flies. It boggles my mind.
