Tom,

you put the spent fuel onto a rocket and aim for the sun. Done.

Stevie-B, I always thought that was a good idea, though I'd aim to send it on a one-way trip beyond the solar system. I say I used to like the idea until the Challenger disaster. Maybe one day we will be confident of every single rocket making it out of our atmosphere, but at this point, it could involve a huge risk if something bad happened before all that nuclear waste cleared our gravitational field.
