Site selection is an easy fix, its just there is no regulation to force them do so. If there is no opposition, then where and when will we say enough is enough, "you guys have to re-think" you need alternatives.

If I may, I think the industry needs to R & D solar power more than anything else. My professor once told us that the energy crisis will never be solved until we rethink the way our homes and buildings are constructed. He suggested self-sustaining buildings (SSD), which there are glimpses of, with schools and office buildings utilizing geothermal (yes it is another alternative-but no impact:)). Where roofs and siding were manufactured with solar cells and rechargeable batteries replaced overhead electric lines coming into the house. We are a long way from there and your right, we need alternatives.
