

Subject: : Conservation

Topic: : Relief From Rhododendron

Re: Relief From Rhododendron

Author: : rckrego

Date: : 2007/3/28 15:21:37

URL:

Instead of removing vegetation from stream banks, why don't we replace understory growth with saplings? Our forests have been disrupted for so long that proper succession isn't even occurring where they are growing back. Why can't we line our streams with native secondary growth trees that will grow and provide the appropriate environment for the rebirth of our old growth forests? Then allow whatever fish enjoy those dark cool forest environs to thrive there, be it brookie or brown.