I just thought of something else and wanted to re-up this thread:

heres something I wish someone would have told me before I ever picked up a rod and dove head first into this very confusing sport (at times) ahem..

"hey , listen....there are 3 or 4 bug types that are on the water there --- there are a lot of bugs under each of those categories...but by having a fly of an "attractor pattern" of each of those species, you can catch fish all the time, - you dont need to have every pattern and memorize every bug on the stream right away"

THATs what i wish someone would have told me -- you can realistically fish with 10 flys (types of flies, not actual flies haha) all summer long and do well.
