It's not a bad idea, but the negative I see is then there will be more harvest of wild fish than "normal" 12" stockers.

Also, most fishermen want instant gratification, so having to wait 2 years for the fish to "grow up" would be too long for them.

Going with you, I think it would benefit more streams. Take the little J for example.

I think the Kish does okay too, but they should stock fingerling browns and not bows. Plus most of the fingerling bows have a schooling mentality and get gobbled up by herons. That's also because they stock them in the slowest shallowest part of the creek.
