I am assuming that this topic has been spawned by the recent story that the PFBC will begin studies of previously fingerling stocked streams and their success (like the LJ-to some extent). And how the PFBC will determine new streams that may fit into a more expanded and "resource-first" driven program.

IMHO, I think this is by far the best policy that I have seen come forward in sometime. Thats if the commission doesn't go on a rampage and do to much to fast and really try to site down and hash it out. This can not only prove cost effective for PA but it may begin to clear-up the gray area with stocking over wild trout populations.
