I used a 3 fly tandem for the first time this year. I always use 2 when nymphing. I'm kind of with Sal on this one. Yeah I can probably catch a few more fish with 3 flies, but I feel more comfortable with 2 right now, and usually snap off a few flies every trip.

My combo almost always consists of an attractor on top, either a #14 or #16 BH Prince or BHHE, both weighted with lead. I then tie on about a 2 foot section of tippet to the eye and swap out my bottom fly throughout the day. That fly ranges from a woolly bugger, another generic nymph, egg, SJW, green weenie, midge, or matching the hatch nymph. I usually use my initial setup for the first hour or so, adjusting weight, or indicator, then changing flies. By the time the day's over I have 6" of tippet between flies lol.
