Why do some people find it so important to assert, and argue strenuously, that there are not pure native strain brook trout in PA? What is their goal? What are their motives? Are they just motivated by the spirit of scientific inquiry, and seeking after knowledge? Or is there something else going on?

Supposing a consensus is reached that there aren't any pure strain brookies left in PA. What would that mean regarding any sort of management decisions? Either fisheries management or public land management or environmental quality decision making?
