

Subject: : Tips and Tricks

Topic: : Aerializing lots of line..

Re: Aerializing lots of line..

Author: : gfen

Date: : 2009/7/9 21:29:05

URL:

Quote:

Heritage-Angler wrote:

gfen - if you're aerializing 60' of line without double hauling, you're doing pretty well. If you want to lengthen your cast, you need to learn to double haul and also to shoot line. Here's some video help on the double haul:

The single haul is easy, its that I just don't know where to do it on the back cast. I honestly think that I should've considered a shooting head system, it almost seems like its suited to my style better, and almost what I've come to doing on a regular basis. Roll cast it out there, pick it up with a mighty single haul, then backcast and launch. C'est la vie.

I tried GW's trick with not using a rod, and I can only wonder if he meant to do that with a 5wt line, and not the 10...I hope so, coz with the 10wt, I was able to rodlessly cast approximately zero feet.

I'm gonna have to start watching videos, coz the reading isnt' cutting it...

Quote:

Can you think of any of your friends that MIGHT be casting instructors? Think hard. 🤔

Believe me, you're on the list of resources. I truly didn't expect it to turn out this badly. I really expected that, without wind at least, I'd be throwing a country mile.

Was curious if the Bean casting school let people walk on with their own equipment, or if you needed to use their stuff; or if you're a hired gun for outside consulting.