I just noticed there is a great interview with Daniel Galhardo, the founder of TenkaraUSA in the interview section here. If you're at all interested in tenkara it's worth a look.

Since my last post, I got an 11' Iwana to use on my trip to Colorado, and found it worked quite nicely in RMNP. People generally think you have to use a very short rod on a brushy stream, but I have found that a longer rod works a lot better than you would expect. You do have to be careful with your backcast, but you get used to the length pretty quickly, and for any spot that's a little more open, the longer rod is a big advantage.
