If the higher license fees for out of state residents means that there will be more DEC officers on the river, than I have no problem with that at all.

From what I understand, there is a new DEC training facility on the SR now, so maybe that will mean more enforcement especially during salmon season.

Also, if you ever took a trip to the hatchery on the SR you would understand the amount of effort that is put forth to maintain that great fishery.

I cannot wait to get up there in Nov.

BJ,

I just wanted to reiterate CLSports' post. NY has a lot of high maintenance fisheries, such as the salmon and delaware rivers, so I kind of see where they are coming from.

If I don't see an increase in enforcement, as alluded to above, I would consider complaining about the cost. Otherwise, I think it's a valid cost.

If you get a yearly license, and ever want to split tourist dollars on a trip to the salmon or west branch, let me know!
